The Man Who Rode Dragons!

Two friends, who by a peculiarity in the vortex, find themselves in the realm of magical creatures. This is a place where dreams come from. After spending two days there, Bill and Larry return but have no memories of the place. Then, the day before graduation from Arizona State University, two people arrive from the other realm. They need Bill and Larry's help. Neither Bill nor Larry remembers anything about their trip to the other side. The two from the other realm return their memories to them. When that happens, they agree to go back. There is one glitch. Diana, Larry's girlfriend, wants to go as well. During the memory transfer, she learns what they remember. Now the three are off on an adventure they never expected.

US Marshall Jay Adams is home with his wife when there's a knock on his front door. His son and two other US Marshalls come to get him. They are calling him back to field duty to track down a man that some are calling a mad scientist. People have been killed, buildings destroyed, and government secrets are missing. The government wants US Marshall Jay Adams to lead the team. Before he retired, he almost always got his man.

He, with his son, and his son's team, board a specially designed airship--a dirigible. They go after one of the wealthiest men in the world, Doctor Sky. The scientist is now on the most dangerous man list with US Marshall Service. In their airship, powered by steam and an electric motor, they travel across the country just one step behind the Doctor.

Endeavoring to awaken, he finds himself tied to a piece of something. Confused, he realizes he's floating among what looks like debris from a ship. "Where am I? More importantly, who am I?"

As he pulls debris from the water to build a safer raft, he spots a large fin heading for him. His first thoughts are shark! His expression contorts in terror. Struggling with all his might, he attempts to get higher out of the water, away from the beast.

Suddenly, another large object rams the shark, chasing the predator away. Out of the drink pops a dolphin, who splashes him, calling to him, "Yak, yak, yak!" The dolphin continues to assist him by pushing large items toward him to enable him to build the craft.

He realizes he is caught in one of the ocean currents. He has no idea where, though, so taking advantage of this, he lets the raft float along. The dolphin leaves but returns the next day. In fact, she returns every day as he continues along.

Plagued by storms and nightmares, he drifts along in the current, trying to make out what the dreams mean. Each day, he searches for—hoping for land.

Nogar the golden dragon rescues Shaméd after his family is murdered by an evil, black dragon. He takes him home to his own planet, where Shaméd encounters trolls, elves, dragons, and other beings all living in peace. He begins a training ritual, and after many years he advances to be the best swordsman on that world and masters the first 10 levels of magic.

Shaméd travels to another planet in his role as one of the Thirty-Six, via a portal called the Mirror Gate, searching for lost knowledge and looking for what Nogar calls the “ONE”. As Shaméd acquires new friends, he embarks on his mission to find the information he is after. He encounters an evil that is attacking the people. He decides to change the rules he was trained to obey and he embarks on a new mission - one to save the people of this world and to help these people in their fight with the evil force that is secretly trying to take control of them and make them slaves.

Shaméd walked to the door with everyone following him. Lila and Zale were laughing out loud. The two guards were looking at them trying to figure out what was so funny. “Alone? Why do you want to be alone? I will always be here to keep you from being alone.” “This is funny lad. Now you will be listening to this thing talking to you all the time.” “Who are you? Why are you talking to Shaméd? Shaméd, is there another dragon that talks with you?”

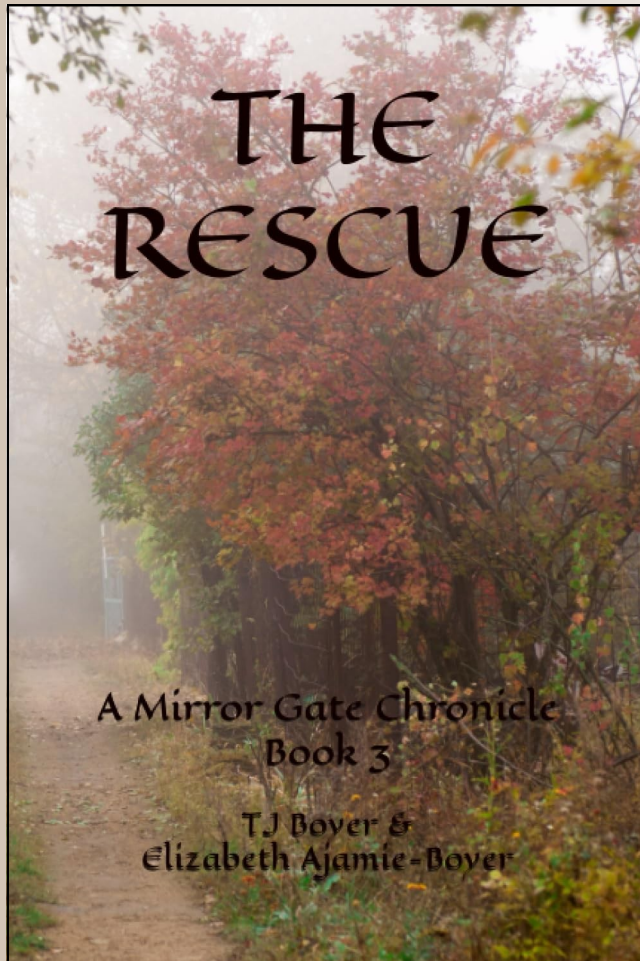

“Yes, Demahs, there is another dragon that talks with me. However Reklan is not a dragon. He is a Dwarf, and he is very far away.” “Dwarf. I have picture memories of them. My parents must have seen them. They are dirty little people right?”

“Dirty little people? Why you little speck of dragon dung, when I see you, I will show you dirty.” “Stop it right now. Demahs, Reklan is a friend and he is very old and smart. You will see him soon, and I want the both of you to not fight inside my head.”

“Ok I won’t talk to him unless you want me to.” “I won’t talk to that creature unless I must.” Shaméd was laughing as they walked down the street. Lila saw him laughing. She reached over and touched Zale’s arm. “Can you tell if he is talking with the dragonet?”

“He is not only talking with the dragonet, but with Reklan. It seems neither one likes the other. They are arguing inside his head.”

Shaméd wakes from his year of sleep training with Red. He gathers a small group of friends and they travel back in time in hopes of rescuing a friend he thought was dead.

Traveling to another world six months in its past is only the first step. They travel across land where Shaméd cannot use any magic for fear of being discovered by the evil entity that has possession of his friend.

Shaméd's hope is to rescue his friend and return to the future to fight in the upcoming war. His never ending adventure continues with a little distraction with his mind linked to three locations. He has to keep focused on where he is now and not where he was or where he will be.

Rae ran away from his home; then he ran away from his world. Now, 400 years later, he is told he must return and claim what he was running from: the throne. Rae returns to his homeworld with Jon and Jym who left with him when they were all sixteen years old. Now they begin the process of making him king. Rae, Jym, and Jon discover something only the Thorns suspected. There is an entity living under the throne room. It controls the secret power plants that are on the world. These power plants are now in disarray from lack of use and from being shut down centuries earlier. Additionally, once Rae has become king, he must unite the other countries and stop the plague that is killing the people of his world. Will he accomplish this, or will he fail like all the kings before him?

Shaméd convinced Rae to return to his home world and become king. Now that the process of him becoming the new king has started, Rae begins rebuilding his world. Rae has recovered the children that were taken. He has met with other the rulers and they have agreed to follow him. All except King Devlin, who is still trying to find a way to assassinate him. As Rae is returning home, Ann contacts him that they have been attacked. Not by land or sea, but from space. Ships have broken through their outer defenses and landed on one of the planets where the AI Terry lives.

The good thing is the Thorns' ship is near and they are on the way to help her. As things progress, two ships from the invaders make it through the planet's defenses. One attacks the city where Ann is, the other is badly damaged and crashes on the other side of the world. With the Mirror Gate down there is no hope for help from offworld. The only help he has is the Thorn ship that is bringing his bride to be to his world. He is not sure how much help they will be, Thorns are pacifist. Rae is now tasked with finding them and fighting a new enemy, not from his world, but from an unknown world.

Energy from the rods and staff shot up. Shaméd followed the beams up. High above the planet a vortex grew. It grew creating a circle of energy, slowly expanding. It would become the way to transport the world and its moons. Shaméd's body jerked side to side; the wind shrieked and the ground began quaking under their feet making it difficult to stand. A blast of wind and dust caused him to become off-balance. He felt his hands ripped from the rods. It was working! Now was the time to act!

This was the tricky part - he opened his eyes to see they both had lost their grip on the metal rods, and they both were floating in the air. The crystals in the staff were almost as bright as the sun above them. One of the crystals exploded abruptly! The staff shot into the air. Shaméd felt a great pressure on his chest, as well as his mind. A piece of the crystal hit him in the head. Disorientated from the blow and losing his concentration, he slowly floated away from the circle. The spell was completed, but for him to survive he had to stay within the circle. He tried to concentrate on a spell that would take him back in. Red was waving his arms. It looked like he was calling out. Whatever he was saying, the words were lost in the cyclone of dust and wind. As he flew through the air, spinning further and further away. He knew he was lost. Then all sight and sound were gone, there was only blackness.

Zale and his men kept going. As they entered the river, hundreds of soldiers, beasts, and small demons came charging toward them. As Zale and his men came out of the water, they had very little time to react. Nakobee entered the water when suddenly he was hit by a fireball. It slammed into his chest with a force so hard, it picked him up and tossed him into the air, then slammed him down on the bank of the river.

We can work together. You can show the GRANT and the ones who made you how well you work without them being here.”The MA-TED said, “If it does not matter to you, that I do not have all my information. Then I will wait to retrieve such data. You are correct I am special, and I do not need anyone to help me. Now why do you wish to look at the planets?”

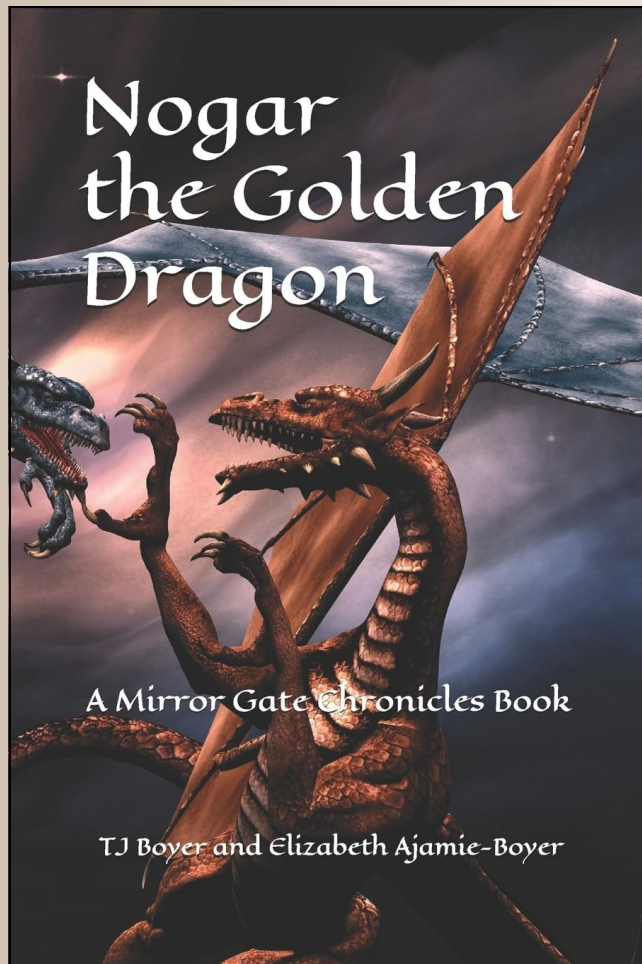

“I want to see who is living on them. If we can find the ones who built you, then we can figure out why the others left, and maybe why they wanted to destroy all of you.”

“They wanted to destroy us?”

“Yes. When they left, the GRANT I was talking with said there were bombs placed around the buildings and a virus in the systems to destroy all your data. You fixed it so the bombs did not function. The ones on the moon helped stop the virus and deactivated the bombs there. Since turning back on, the GRANT could not find anyone alive on the moon.”“They tried to kill me? I cannot even retaliate. I do not even remember them. Now I understand why I have missing memories. They were infected. If I had a body I would kick something.”

The tone of the MA-TED sounded upset. The world thought it strange a machine could act and sound like this. He almost wished he met this machine first.

Before Shaméd the Wizard, Rednogording the King of the Dragons was uniting the races by forming a coalition to fight evil in the solar system. In his adventures, he discovers a special planet. As he explores this new world, he finds evidence of a forgotten civilization and magic left behind. When he dies from a serious injury caused by protecting his mate, Rednogording leaves behind a chaotic coalition, and a son, Nogar who has to put it all back together with the help of his subjects. The special planet, forgotten for a time, until Nogar's mother reminds him about it, and he journeys to continue his father's investigation of it. They lived before the creation of time, playing in the oceans, air, and on land. They could go wherever they wanted. For some that meant there was no planet out of their reach.

One such creature roamed from planet to planet learning and searching, searching for the ONE who had created them. He, like all the others similar to him, believed all other living creatures were there for their enjoyment, to play with or to be food. As far as they were concerned, they were the most intelligent creatures the One created. They called themselves Dragons. There are many types of dragons. Some live in water and others on land. They do not agree about many things, but the one thing all dragons agree on is they are not like the wyverns.

Dragons have arms, legs, and wings on their backs. Wyverns have two back legs and their front arms are part of their wings. Wyverns for the most part, have the same abilities as dragons. However, there are more dragons than wyverns. When the dragons discovered the new creatures, time began for the universe ...
