Sheena Sharma

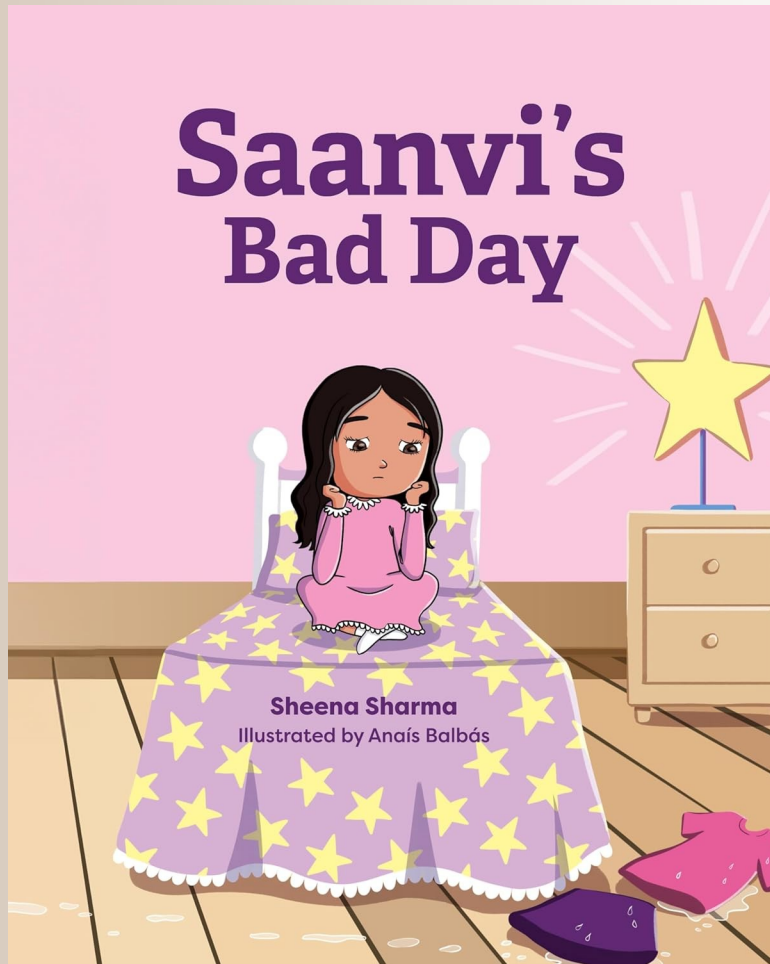

As part of her homework assignment for school, Saanvi is tasked with completing her family tree. She is so excited to learn more about the members of her family! But Saanvi starts to understand that family relationships, though rooted in love, are sometimes complicated. She questions why some family members are more present in her life than others.

With the help of her parents, Saanvi navigates the difficult topic of familial estrangement. She learns that sometimes, when people are unkind, it is best to take a pause and come back together, when ready, with love and respect.

After having a terrible day at school, Saanvi returns home frustrated and mad. All she wants to do is sulk in her room until she has an eye-opening conversation with her dad. During their talk, she learns how grown-ups have bad days too. Grownups and kids are more similar than she originally thought!

Join Saanvi as she learns the different ways to turn her bad days around. When Saanvi has another bad day at school the next week, will she be able to tackle her unhappiness in a positive way?
