Josie Kaye is a newly minted private investigator, with money and a soft spot for her grampa's old stories. But when her best friend begs her to investigate a decades-old death—one that's haunted her family since Tucson's sunbaked streets ran red—Josie can't say no. Easy, it's decades old, right?

The victim? A man her grandfather still calls friend, decades later. The twist? That man may have been mob-connected. The shock? So might Grampa.

As Josie digs into the shadows of the past, she uncovers whispers of rackets, betrayals, and a truth her grandfather never wanted her to find under someone else's terms. What begins as a favor turns into Josie's own confusion and grampa's reckoning. Because grampa's love runs deep and mob loyalty may run deeper.

And when the final piece falls into place, Josie will have to decide: is it understanding Grampa craves... or forgiveness?
